CLYDE&CO

Succesful risk navigation

The Renaissance of the Aeronautical Sector: SAF and the Caribbean Hub

The global aeronautical sector is undergoing an unprecedented transformation. This is not merely an operational recovery, but a mandatory energy transition.

The global aeronautical sector is undergoing an For Venezuela, with its privileged geographical location, this shift represents both a regulatory challenge and a high-impact investment opportunity.

Decarbonization: Regulatory Compliance

The increase in emissions and extreme weather events, such as atmospheric turbulence and loss of takeoff efficiency due to high temperatures, have accelerated the creation of international legal frameworks.

For airlines, sustainability has shifted from an ethical goal to a compliance requirement for operating in regulated markets, under schemes such as CORSIA (Carbon Offsetting and Reduction Scheme for International Aviation).

Venezuela: A Hub in Revitalization

With approximately 120 weekly international flights and the operation of more than ten international airlines, Venezuela projects a growth trend similar to that previously experienced by the Colombian market. Our position at the northern tip of South America places us as the natural bridge between North America and Europe.

Investment Opportunity

This resurgence involves more than just reopening routes; it demands the modernization of infrastructure toward sustainable models.

Sustainable Aviation Fuel (SAF):

Sustainable Aviation Fuel (SAF) is emerging as the most viable technical and legal solution. As a "drop-in" fuel (requiring no engine modifications), it allows for immediate compliance with international regulations.

Strategic Advantages of SAF:

- Emission Reduction: Between 70% and 80% reduction in greenhouse gas emissions compared to conventional fuel.
- Energy Security: Diversification of national supply sources.
- Circular Economy: Acts as a catalyst for auxiliary industries that process agricultural and urban waste.

Diego Berrizbeitia Grand
Abogado, Caracas
Aviación
+58 212 816 7057
Diego.Berrizbeitia@clydeco.com.ve

Visita
www.clydeco.com